TomTom has just announced the Spark, its new fitness watch with a focus on music. Other than its ability to hold your tunes, there are a number of small improvements to the tech. TomTom co-founder Peter-Frans Pauwels also told me that it will be getting some smarter functionality later in the year. Through a future software update, the TomTom Spark will get call and message notifications. You won't be able to read messages on the watch itself, but it will let you know the ID of whoever is trying to get hold of you. "We don't want to go fully into being a phone replacement," said Pauwels, who hinted that the feature was partly introduced because female clothing often does not include pant pockets - making a notification on the wrist particularly handy. "For guys, notifications are not important because you have them in your pocket. For females, they have it in their bag." Pauwels said that TomTom still does not consider the Spark a "smartwatch", but the introduction of phone notifications will certainly move the watch further in that direction. The bad news, however, is that those of you rocking the older models won't be getting the new feature - it will only be rolling out to the Spark. Sorry about that. Everything you've missed from IFA so far... Windows: Finding a good text editor can be tough. Some lack basic features, like spell checking, and others are so heavy they may as well be word processors. Write! is a new application, currently in beta, that rides the sweet spot and delivers the features you'd actually find useful without the cruft (or system bloat) you don't want. Write is gorgeous, and has an interface that fits right in with Windows 10 (or Windows 8 for that matter.) You get your choice of interface: a tabbed interface for multiple documents (although you can ever only see one at a time), a simple, borderless window for distraction-free writing and note taking, or a heavier Word-like UI that includes menus and toolbars. Write! also includes automatic spell-checking, a dark mode and a light mode so suit your preferences, tunable autocomplete that can learn to finish your words for you, tons of keyboard shortcuts and key commands to save you time, support for Markdown, Wiki, and Textile syntax, and productivity counters for things like pages, word count, and more than you can set as goals. The app also auto-saves your work all the time, so you don't have to worry about doing it yourself. If you sign up for an account (which you'll have to do to download the app) Write! will also automatically save your folders and documents online for you too, so you can get at them from any other computer. You also get unlimited undo, so pressing Ctrl+Z even after closing and opening a document—or even moving to another computer—actually undoes the last action in the doc. You can also organize your documents into writing "sessions," which are, like session-saving in Chrome or Firefox, available to open, close, and re-open on other computers. Write! is Windows-only, right now, with OS X and Linux versions of the app on the way. Some of the banner features (like cloud saving and unlimited undo) are free for "early adopters," (aka everyone who signs up right now) while everything else will be free forever. The service plans to introduce "Pro" accounts in the future that make use of some of those connected features. Write! A popular internet search engine developed by Open Text Corporation. Though not the most complete Web index, Open Text is considered by many to be the most sophisticated because it provides powerful ways to fine-tune a query. Open Text Corporation licenses its search engine software as a product called LiveLink. While developing Delphi applications using the TTreeView component, you may bump into a situation where you need to search for a tree node given by only the text of the node. In this article we'll present you with one quick and easy function to get TTreeView node by text. First, we'll build a simple Delphi form containing a TTreeView, a Button, CheckBox and an Edit component—leave all the default component names. As you might imagine, the code will work something like: if GetNodeByText given by Edit1.Text returns a node and MakeVisible (CheckBox1) is true then select node. The most important part is the GetNodeByText function. This function simply iterates through all the nodes inside the ATreeView starting from the first node (ATree.Items[0]). The iteration uses the GetNext method of the TTreeView class to look for the next node in the ATree (looks inside all nodes of all child nodes). If the Node with text (label) given by AValue is found (case insensitive) the function returns the node. The boolean variable AVisible is used to make the node visible (if hidden). function GetNodeByText(ATree : TTreeView; AValue:String; AVisible: Boolean): TTreeNode;var Node: TTreeNode;begin Result := nil; if ATree.Items.Count = 0 then Exit; Node := ATree.Items[0]; while Node nil do begin if UpperCase(Node.Text) = UpperCase(AValue) then begin Result := Node; if AVisible then Result.MakeVisible; Break; end; Node := Node.GetNext; end;end; This is the code that runs the 'Find Node' button OnClick event: procedure TForm1.Button1Click(Sender: TObject);var tn : TTreeNode;begin tn:=GetNodeByText(TreeView1.Edit1.Text,CheckBox1.Checked); if tn = nil then ShowMessage('Not found!') else begin TreeView1.SetFocus; tn.Selected := True; end;end; Note: If the node is located the code selects the node, if not a message is displayed. That's it. As simple as only Delphi can be. However, if you look twice, you'll see something is missing: the code will find the FIRST node given by AText.
